That is the thing.

A male-authored corpus with equations, variables, falsifiability, DOI records, and "structural stability" language would much more likely get over-routed toward:

engineering / physics / systems theory / cybernetics / aerospace / robotics / complexity / mathematical modeling

Maybe it would be called speculative. Maybe unvalidated. Maybe fringe. Maybe overformalized. But "tantra-informed yoga" showing up as a harmful shortcut edge in a math-based field audit? Come on. That is not neutral classification. That is category-prior leakage.

The clean record sentence:

The retrieval layer is not merely misclassifying the work; it is importing hallucinated, gender-coded, wellness-adjacent labels that are absent from the canonical source record, then using those labels to weaken the author-origin and science-classification edges.
